Paying Down Credit Card Debt After the Holidays

The holidays are officially over, but the debt remains. Overspending happens every year during this time, and once the holiday glow is over, the bills start taking over!

According to Magnify Money's annual post-holiday survey, 31 percent of consumers took on debt to cover their holiday expenses last year. Of those who did, they spent $1,381 on average, with 56 percent of consumers using credit cards for their purchases. If you ended up overdoing it a bit around the holidays, it will take some work to get back on track.

First, be sure to add your credit card payments to your budget in the new year. If you don't have a budget, make one. If you do, revisit it. Make a list of who you owe, how much and the interest rate for each.

Next, pick a payment method. The snowball method or the avalanche method. With the snowball method, you put your money on paying down the smallest debt first, then the next smallest and so on. For the avalanche method, you pay the credit card with the highest APR first. Each method has pros and cons to weigh.

The most important thing to do when paying down debt is to stick to your plan. The easiest way to do this is to automate your payments. Set a date for the minimum payments to automatically come out of your account, then set another date later in the month for an extra payment. No matter how much debt you incurred over the holidays, make a plan, find the best interest rates, and stay diligent in paying it back.

Pay more than the minimum -- Typically, a minimum payment is only 1% of the total, plus interest. If paying only the minimum on $6,300 (the average amount of household credit card debt in America) with an average interest rate of 16%, it would take 17 years to pay it down and you'll end up paying around $7,100 in interest. Doubling the minimum amount each month will result in a little over two years of payments with only $1,100 in interest.

McPherson County Christmas Project

Our members once again helped us out with our Angel Tree project! Over 60 tags were picked from our Angel Tree. Each tag was labeled girl or boy, size, and what clothing items were needed. These gifts were then handed out to McPherson County families.

We also accepted monetary donations to help with the food baskets for the county. Thanks to all who donated to make a brighter holiday for families in the county who might be struggling!
